

DESCRIPTIVE ABSTRACT

The invention relates to a device for measuring exposure to radiations comprising at least a component for detecting photons or particles associated with at least one circuit for acquiring and counting 5 detection events.

The invention provides that the response curve of the number of counted events versus the number of photons or particles sensed by each detection component, is a monotonous increasing curve.

10

Fig. 6.